front ~~flashes~~

October 22nd, 1914

I am writing this at night. There are a) ... ~~flashes~~ ... of light in the sky, because we are near the b) line now. We arrived in France yesterday. When we got off the ship, we saw long lines of c) soldiers. It was terrible to see them, but the men soon forgot about them. They are excited about going to war!

The other d) in my e) think that this war is going to be easy, but Captain Stewart and I don't agree. We have fine horses, and we are f) of them. But how can men on horses fight against g) guns? A few of those guns in the right place can stop the best h) in the world.

We will meet the enemy soon, and I will try to do my best when we do. Perhaps I will live to see my home again.

Germans

Joey's cavalry unit wins their first battle with the ~~British~~, but they lose one half of their men and horses, and Captain Stewart dies. The next day, Joey meets his new rider – Trooper Warren. Warren is not a bad rider but a very nice man. He talks to Joey and tells him about his family.

When the summer comes, the armies make long roads on either side of the front line. The ground is too hard for cavalry horses, so they stay behind the front line. It rains all the time, and a lot of the horses are ill, but Trooper Warren looks after Joey. When nobody is around, he reads Joey books from his mother in England.

In the winter, Joey's unit goes back to war. They charge towards the enemy, and most of them die. Suddenly, Joey and Tophorn are alone with their riders in a trench. Then they see enemy horses all around them.
